Fisherman's Luck

This is determined to a great extent by the style of bait and quality of tackle used. Any authority on fishing knows this and is ever on the alert for the best and newest baits made.

We have a nice line of baits including new designs of spoons, flies, horn minnows, rubber insects, spinners and phantom minnows. Our line of reels is also worthy of mention and we stock a good assortment of lines and leaders. This department of our business is under the able management of our Mr. Stephenson, who knows the kind of bait best suited to any special kind of fishing. He will be pleased to tell you some interesting things about angling which should be of profit and interest.

Moved by Mr. Hart, seconded by W. M. Jarvis that we have the annual sports on July 2nd Carried. A nominating committee was then appointed who, in turn, appointed the following committee of management.

Railway

Extension in Town

The C. P. R. have commenced work on their yards here and during the summer a large amount of new yardroom will be built, also the stock yards and round house. There are at present a large number of teams at work grading.

This week a gang of seventy men will be here to lay track, and everything will be rushed along. It is expected that this work will take about three months.

A spur has already been graded into the Flour Mill and it is expected that one will be put into the yard of the Red Deer Brick Co.

Cricket.

On Saturday, June 2nd, a very enjoyable match was played between Pine Lake Cricket Club and the surrounding country. The Pine Lake team sadly miss the support of their late standbys and the team on a whole are not as good as in past years. However there is every prospect of them improving with practice.

At the end of the match the Lake was obliged to haul down their colors to the superiority of the country Club. Should the Lake fail to better themselves before running up against our local Cricket Club, the cup donated by Mr. Jacobson is sure to remain in town. Much to the surprise of the spectators, Mr. Pope, Captain of the Lake team failed to make a run.

Summer Tours For Teachers.

The Canadian Northern R.R. has in course of preparation some very attractive summer tours to Eastern Canada and United States points. Tickets will be on sale from June 1st daily up to about Sept. 15th and will be good for return until Oct. 30th, with liberal stop over privileges.

Commencing June 3rd, we are placing in effect a daily train service between Edmonton and Port Arthur which will be an improvement upon the present service and the equipment in the trains will be of the very best, comprising handsome Pullman and Dining cars, and first and second class coaches. At Port Arthur connection will be made with all steamers for Owen Sound and Sarnia.

I would suggest that the individual members of the Teachers' Institutes who contemplate taking a trip east this year should communicate with me advising date they desire to leave, route preferred and anything special they desire when I shall take great pleasure in endeavoring to meet their wishes.

You will understand that we can only ticket the persons living off our own line from Edmonton and I am sure that both our Depot and City ticket agents at Edmonton will be only too glad to be of any service to the teachers in the way of reserving berths and giving information.

A LESSON FROM RUSSIA.

The leaders of one of the parties in the new Russian Parliament tell us in vivid language something of what the common people of Russia expect from their representatives. "Do not imagine," some of these representatives were told on leaving for the halls of legislation, "you can return home with nothing done. You must be ready to lay down your lives for the people's rights. Do not allow your selves to be driven from your posts of duty by force. Remaining there you may meet a glorious death; driven home with nothing accomplished you will meet a shameful one."

The spirit of the declaration quoted indicates the sort of service the people of Russia, just entering into the privileges of popular Government, expect from those to whom they are delegating authority to act for them.

We fear that a rigid adherence to a similar rule on the part of the Canadian people toward each federal and provincial representative who returned from a session with nothing done toward the material advantage of his constituency, would rapidly diminish the number of members.

Seriously however, what do we expect from our representatives at Ottawa and the provincial capitals? To these we commit the spending of millions of dollars of our money every year. In school and civic affairs men sharply criticize the expenditure of every dollar and annually demand a strict account of stewardship; why this was done, and that was not done. But in political affairs we empower men to make laws which affect for good or ill, every person in the country. What account do we here keep of duty performed? How many individual citizens, after a session, think of asking their several representatives to give an annual account, in public meeting of what has been accomplished and attempted; of what has been done for his constituency?

To particularize, what benefit has Red Deer received from the legislation of the past session? True, we share in the benefits of the general legislation of the country but we would do that in any case, even without a representative.

The member of a Legislature must, of course, transact the general business of the country; must dispose of the numberless details of business that occur in endless routine. Each member should be alive to the interests of his own constituency. Especially is this true in a new and growing province, where settlement is rapidly taking place, where towns are springing up, and where the advantages secured by a town at the initial sessions of the Legislature may largely determine the future status of that town. This is where a strong member is a boon: he can press the claims of his constituency upon the notice of the government and receive recognition of the same. This was the great argument used during the Alberta elections, especially in Red Deer.

To day what have we? The Capital-fence is over; and machine politics will dispose of the University and Agriculture College questions in the same manner.

And Red Deer, Well Red Deer should at least become the centre of a judicial district. But as far as we can learn, nothing has been done in this direction. Already we are informed, two judicial districts have been formed in the south, and another at Wetaskiwin.

Red Deer in virtue of central position and other advantages, should be chosen as the centre of a judicial district for Central Alberta.

The Board or Trade or the town Council can do nothing, for it is a rule that the initiative in a matter of this kind must come through the Legislative member. So unless our member chooses to act we are helpless. In no spirit of unfair criticism, but in a friendly way, we would urge upon Mr. Moore's attention the just claims of Red Deer to become the centre of a judicial district; and would ask for some information through the columns of our Liberal contemporary as to what is being done in this regard.

THE CONSPIRACY AGAINST SASKATCHEWAN

It is not clear that the full extent of the conspiracy against the liberties of the people of Saskatchewan has yet been revealed. When the Autonomy Bills were framed to meet the views of the Papal Ablegate, public opinion was outraged.

The debate in Parliament and a discussion of the question in the press marked one of the most intense political periods in the history of Canada. Notwithstanding the precedents that were cited, and the general dissatisfaction that was expressed with the legislation even by the Globe, the measure passed the House with all the objectionable features with which it was introduced. So far from that being the end it was only the beginning of a series of actions so indefensible that they have roused the indignation and resentment of every decent citizen of the country.

Following the adoption of the Autonomy Bills came the appointment of Lieut.-Governor, Forget, who in turn selected Walter Scott for Premier, and put the machinery of government into the hands of men whom subsequent events have shown to be absolutely unscrupulous. Then follow a perfect storm of political corruption, the worst example being that of Prince Albert, where the deputy returning officers did not even take the trouble to open the polls, but cast the ballots themselves.

When this was discovered Judge Prendergast admitted one hundred and fifty spurious ballots. In the attempt to bring the corruptionists to trial this same judge has decided that there is no controverted election Act. Therefore there is no machinery provided to try the men who are guilty of corrupt practices, but even that is not the end.

In order to meet this case Mr. Haultain moved in the Legislature of Saskatchewan to make the old controverted elections ordinance applicable to the last election to permit the trial of protests. One would think that any set of politicians would be ashamed to oppose such a measure. Yet the Scott majority gave it a six months' hoist. When the situation is considered calmly it is seen to be the most extraordinary act that a Government could be guilty of.

Nineteen members of the Government party have their election protested. Among them is the Attorney-General, the man charged with the administration of the law. There is no statute under which the protests can be tried.

When Mr. Haultain endeavors to have a law passed to meet the case, he is met with opposition by the Attorney-General whose seat is threatened and at whose instance the effort to make it possible to try the protest is defeated. The Scott Government is afraid to go to trial even with their partisans on the Bench. If ever a Province began a career under disgraceful conditions, surely it is Saskatchewan. It has been at the mercy of a band of conspirators who would be a disgrace to a South American Republic.

The conspiracy to deprive the new Province of its rights, to deny it effective machinery for honest government, has ruined the reputation of Sir Wilfrid Laurier as a statesman, and it has planted seeds of discontent in the new Province that will bear bitter fruit in the future. In the name of Lib-oralism, the most sacred rights of the people of the new Province have been sacrificed. There is no inquiry so great that those implicated in the crime of robbing a Province of its franchise and of its constitutional privileges have hesitated to commit. It is well nigh impossible to find words to express one's contempt for a man who would act Premier of the Government of Saskatchewan under the existing conditions. Equally contemptible are they who have followed him in a series of actions so discreditable as to make his name and the name of his Government stink in the nostrils of the people of Canada. A Miser's Hoard

By ALLEN
Copyright, 1900, by Beatrice Reade

Jacob Van Giltren had been known as a miser for thirty years. His wealth people looked for a large sum of money to turn up. Jake, as he was always referred to, lived on a farm about three miles from the village of Castle. It was a farm of eighty acres, and yet it produced few crops. Aside from corn or two of corn and potatoes for his own use, he planted nothing. He began with a little money, and in the course of fifteen years he was the capitalist of the county. If anybody was willing to pay his usual rates of interest, he could borrow from $5 to $5,000 without trouble. For many years he did business with the bank in the village, but finally became suspicious and took care of his own funds.

It finally became a matter of gossip for long years around that Miser Van Giltren kept thousands of dollars in his old farmhouse, and for once gossip was right. Of course there were men who told him of the risks he ran and advised him against it, but he smiled at their solicitude and made no change.

It was predicted that robbers would come and that he would be found murdered. And in due time robbers came. They came more than once, and they tried several sorts of tricks on the old miser. The first pair of robbers simply kicked the old door open in the darkness of midnight and rushed in to catch the miser in bed. He wasn't in bed, however. He was up and dressed and armed with a shotgun, and he peppered the fellows so thoroughly that there was no trouble in arresting them when the constables came.

The next man who came along was in the guise of an old woman. He made a call just at dark, hobnobbing with the miser and telling a story of want and destitution, but when he got ready to take the old man by the neck Jake wasn't there. He dodged him and got hold of that old shotgun and gave the stranger a dose that kept him in the hospital for four months before he could be taken to jail to await arraignment.

When the miser had reached what might be called old age, the authorities of the county insisted that he take shingles were taken from the roof. One reason why the search was so keen and thorough was because of the number of heirs who came forward. Plenty of people had heard old Jake declare that he was the last of his race and that he would leave his estate to the first of his relatives who came forward. There were second cousins living in some provinces in Germany, but no sooner had news of his death traveled than first cousins began showing up and filing their claims.

Van Giltren was German born, but Englishmen, Frenchmen and Americans came forward, claiming to be heirs, and none of them was without his account, was anything less than a perfect lie. The miser, however, did not mind search, and although not allowed to participate in it, the sheriff did his whole duty. When he had finished with the house it was a wreck, and all agreed that a dollar bill could not have been hidden away and escaped the search.

As nothing was found in the house, the "heirs" insisted on the grounds being searched. Diggers threw up the earth at the foot of every tree, rocks were rolled over and manholes burrowed into, and another two weeks were wasted in vain.

Washington's sunshades are also among the novelties of the season. Some are made so they can be slipped off their frames entirely to be laundered, but it does not seem probable that this is a profitable idea. It is doubtful if the linen cover would fit the frame after it had been washed. It is best, therefore, to wash the cover and the frame and dry it, of course, with the frame wide open.

LINGERIE HATS.

With Several Sets of Linen Tops. Washable Sunshades. A novelty in hats because of the number of heirs who came forward. Plenty of people had heard old Jake declare that he was the last of his race and that he would leave his estate to the first of his relatives who came forward. There were second cousins living in some provinces in Germany, but no sooner had news of his death traveled than first cousins began showing up and filing their claims.

Such a hat permits of having several sets of linen tops, and, in fact, each hat is sold with three separate sets, one of white linen and the other of colored linen embroidered in white, so with little trouble the same hat can be made to match any number of gowns. They are trimmed with a large bow of ribbon in front, and a band of the same ribbon is passed under the straps that connect the crown and brim.

Washington's sunshades are also among the novelties of the season. Some are made so they can be slipped off their frames entirely to be laundered, but it does not seem probable that this is a profitable idea. It is doubtful if the linen cover would fit the frame after it had been washed. It is best, therefore, to wash the cover and the frame and dry it, of course, with the frame wide open.

COIFFURE STYLES.

The Smart Girl Now Forgets Her Hair. The fashion of dressing the hair low on the neck, says the Boston Traveler, is not so much in evidence as formerly, the most modest effects being gained by having the hair pulled down from the back of the head, with the hair curled rather than put, not too far back.

The fashion of parting the hair and waving it in a twist at the sides just above the ears is another style illustrated among the drawings and is a very stylish and becoming arrangement, when it is becoming. The very young girls wear their hair in a loosely waving pompadour or with the front hair parted and the hair just described, the back being braided and looped up and tied with a large ribbon bow. In some cases two bows are used, one at the back and another at the top of the head.

Longer Blouses From Paris. Among the novelties of the new fashions which Paris has sent over for spring are those in which tiny insertions of lace fill out the embroidery. Not far from this was done a year ago, however. This new use makes the lace literally a part of the design instead of being a separate sort of trimming. Ways, a separate sort of trimming. Rather large flowers are taken as a motif and embroidered in the usual way, but the only difference is that the flowers are made of the flower being done in a succession of tightly curled petals, a bit of lace is set square in the center, the flowers carrying out the idea of the pattern.

Sometimes the leaves are done the same way, with just a heavily embroidered leaf and a center of lace, the design in such a case being one of the many conventional forms, its shape conforming in a general way with the shape of the leaf. Sometimes these bits of lace give the whole design an effect of light and shading which is indescribably different.

Concerning Short Sleeves. Short sleeves have been worn on nearly all occasions for almost a year now, but last summer the short sleeves were made with deep lace cuffs. The question now comes up as to what style of sleeve is to be worn on a separate bodice and what style of sleeve looks much as though the controversy were going to degenerate into a long and hard fought feud. It is a relief, however, to find that the short sleeve is not always sold, thus making a perfectly fresh waist look anything but new. But on the other hand, a short sleeve with a simple shirt waist seems strangely inappropriate. Then again, and this is an all important matter—elbow sleeves on a white waist worn with a dark skirt under the figure and gives it a most unbecoming line.

A Mother to the Girl. The woman who lost her maid at the moment that she was expecting visitors went to the janitor in his distress, hoping that he might be able to find one to help her out. He was a friendly and obliging man, and he offered her a girl who was a maid.

To Make Tabacloths Last Longer. When tabacloths are beginning to get shabby in the middle or at the folds, a few inches cut off at one end and the same side will give a new place of all folds and will give the cloth a new lease of life.

The Black Hawk War. The Black Hawk war began on April 21, 1831, and ended Sept. 31, 1832. The number of regular soldiers in the army was 1,200, and the number of volunteers and militia numbered 5,120, a total of 6,320 men who saw actual service.

A FAMOUS SWINDLER.

Edward Donkin, Who Posed as a Priest, Ends a Long Career of Crime.

Edward Donkin, "bishop of Santa Croce of Antioch" and holder of several other self-created ecclesiastical titles, is dead in London. He was one of the most famous swindlers of the day.

For fifteen years he ranged the world from London to Melbourne, obtaining money and getting credit upon his pretensions to a high ecclesiastical position and great piety. He swindled all the branches of the Catholic church, including the pope, at various times as a priest of the Roman Catholic church, the Greek Catholics, the Old Catholics, and the Christus of England.

He worked monasteries by the dozen, and his changes of faith were swifter and more dastardly than those of the vicar of Bray. Yet he was a man of great energy and his learning in theology that remained hundreds of years in England who believed until last year that he was a persecuted and unforgotten man.

He was exposed in 1905 by Labouchere in the London Truth, and a part of his life is now known.

Origin Is Unknown. Just who Donkin was no one knows. It is said that he was born in England and that he was a member of the Australian in the early '60s and entered a Benedictine monastery.

How a Test Association Works. We are now in the midst of a great agitation in America over the subject of better dairy cows. Ten years ago the dairyman who was content to milk a cow and get a few pounds of milk for his own use was now a member of a test association.

History generally repeats itself in the matter of pasture. Grass always grows in the same places, and the hungry milkmaid will find it so again next season. Plan now to meet it then.

THE PASTURES

Perhaps the most conspicuous source of loss in pastures is to be seen in the matter of pasture. Grass always grows in the same places, and the hungry milkmaid will find it so again next season. Plan now to meet it then.

With Kentucky Blue Grass. Where Kentucky blue grass will thrive successfully the land may be made to produce a large amount of milk. The white clover, however, always goes with Kentucky blue grass where the land is good, and the continued uniform growth of the grass from year to year is due to the fertility given the soil by the white clover.

An Early Start For Clover. Clover should be sown as early in the spring as possible, so that it may get the advantage of the first growing season. It is one of the most important, almost all important, to young stock. We all know how damp the ground is on the surface during the early spring months, and how often when clover needs moisture there.

BRINGING UP A CALF.

Ideas About Correct Care, Training and Feeding.

An eastern dairyman has some very pronounced ideas about how a calf should be brought up. He says that calves show their bringing up just as plainly as folks do. Judging from the way they act, some never have had much bringing up.

The time to begin bringing up the calf is when it is just getting on its feet. It should be taken from the mother, and that should be the last of the calf's early life.

New milk, warm from the cow and fed three times a day, is the right thing for the first week or two. Change to twice a day, but give a little more milk. At three weeks of age lessen the new milk and add a little of the old milk.

Give a bit of bright hay when the calf will begin to eat it, and that will keep it from getting fat. If you have tried it. You need not fear scours after the calf eats hay.

Drop a bit of buckwheat shorts into a shovelful of hay and mix the calf. Soon it will begin to lick it. Add a little alfalfa by week weeks later.

TELESCOPES.

The Difference Between Reflecting and Refracting Telescopes.

A very pretty little experiment which illustrates the two methods of forming an optical image and by way of corollary illustrates the essential difference between reflecting and refracting telescopes may be performed by any one who possesses a reading glass and a magnifying hand mirror. In a room that is not too brightly illuminated pin a sheet of white paper on the wall opposite to a window that by preference should face the north or away from the position of the sun.

From the latter. By moving it to and fro a little you will be able to find a distance corresponding to the focal length of the lens, at which a picture of the window will be formed on the paper. This picture, or image, will be upside down because the rays of light cross at the focus. By moving the glass a little you will be able to get the picture of the window to become indistinct, while a beautiful image of the houses, trees or other objects of the outdoor world beyond will be formed upon the paper. We thus learn that the distance of the image from the lens varies with the distance of the object whose image is formed. In exactly similar manner an image is formed at the focus of the object glass of a reflecting telescope.

THE FARMER'S SHEEP.

Popularity and Excellent Qualities of the Shropshire.

The Shropshire sheep is unquestionably the most popular of all the breeds if we may judge by the comparative numbers shown at the various exhibitions and equally by the flocks seen on the farms as one passes along the roads in such localities as sheep are usually kept. Frankly it is the farmer's sheep, says Henry Shaw, a Country Gentleman, and the following are some of the reasons for his opinion.

The Shropshire has an excellent reputation as a prime mutton sheep, especially for its most desirable lambs for the Easter and Christmas market. Its home is in the best part of England, where agriculture is most highly developed, and it stands at the head of that class of sheep commonly called the Downs breeds.

Its qualifications as a farm sheep are various. It is hardy and prolific. One flock in England has been trained to produce two sets of lambs every year, and the number of lambs per ewe number rarely doubles annually, and as this sheep is very precocious, and if well cared for may be bred as lambs the second year after increase in the same proportion, the flock is proportionately more profitable than one in which the lambs are born in the first year. The sheep of this breed are easily disciplined and are rarely troublesome on the farms as one passes along the roads in such localities as sheep are usually kept. Frankly it is the farmer's sheep, says Henry Shaw, a Country Gentleman, and the following are some of the reasons for his opinion.

It is easily fed and when three years old may easily be made to dress twenty pounds to the quarter. It is a prolific breeder. A prime ram has a live weight of over 300 pounds, and his fleece of that year, not quite a year's growth, may average ten or twelve pounds. An excellent characteristic is that it improves the character of the soil when bred in the same proportion, the flock is proportionately more profitable than one in which the lambs are born in the first year.
